The Special Shareholder Meeting Proposal 5 Deserves a Vote of Support

KEYS incorrectly claims that an improvement in the current right of shareholders to call a special shareholder could give a small minority the power to promote a narrow interest. This is unlikely because a small minority is wasting their money unless they promote an issue that has board shareholder support. A special shareholder meeting still requires a majority vote to approve an issue.

There have been hundreds of similar opposition statements with a misplaced concern about minority shareholders. But not one of these opposition statements has ever cited a special shareholder meeting, called for shareholders, actually ever occurring at a company worth at least $5 billion.

Apparently there are no so-called minority shareholders at hundreds of companies that consider the a right for even 10% of shares to call for a special shareholder meeting as attractive enough to make use of such a right.

Please vote in support of Proposal 5 for an improved right for KEYS shareholders to call for a special shareholder meeting
