

Medpace Holdings (MEDP) shareholders can vote for the genuine Special Shareholder Meeting Proposal 7 and can reject the sneaky Special Shareholder Meeting Proposal 6

Proposal 6 is a sneaky proposal. MEDP shareholders can be tricked into believing that Proposal 7 does not disqualify all shares not owned for a full year.

MEDP mentions the 25% figure 6-times in Proposal 6 and 4-times fails to mention the one-year disqualification clause that is joined at the hip to the 25% figure.

The one-year disqualification clause means that it could take 40% of the remaining non-disqualified MEDP shares to call for a special shareholder meeting.

To make matters worse the 25% requirement and the one-year disqualification clause each by themselves put a so-called right to call for a special shareholder meeting out of reach for MEDP shareholders.

The 25% figure is potentially devastating by itself because more than 100 companies have had an opportunity to name one company where shareholders, faced with the 25% requirement, ever succeeded in calling for a special shareholder meeting. Not a single such company has ever been cited.

A one-year disqualification clause is potentially devastating by itself because more than 100 companies have had an opportunity to name one company where shareholders, faced with such a one-year disqualification clause, ever succeeded in calling for a special shareholder meeting. Not a single such company has ever been cited.

MEDP thus has double redundancy in preventing its shareholders from calling for a special shareholder meeting under its Proposal 6.

Proposal 7 by contrast calls for an attainable 10% of shares to call for a special shareholder meeting and specifically rules out a one-year disqualification clause.

MEDP being sneaky in promoting Proposal 6 is a red flag for shareholders to potentially put MEDP on a check list to see if MEDP is sneaky when it engages in shareholder outreach and when MEDP describes its executive pay in the annual meeting proxy.
